MediaCoder Even though the compound of all 3 of these online games is pretty low, it's a lot higher than say, a stock that had 150+ IPOs in the first 6 months of 2019. That is not a lot, you have to understand that most people play online games and at the same time, they also play these online games offline on Facebook. Games are all online now. People are spending their entire day on online games. No wonder that the stock reached such a high. A: The explanation for the high price is that retail investors are buying the stock hoping for a future increase in value. Retail investors typically don't watch the market closely enough to discover that the expected future increase in value is just that. In the long run, the value of Facebook actually decreases. After 20 years, the only people who are likely to have held on to a stock for that long will be retirees and other people not actively investing. That's it. Those people don't see the future value of the stock as high in the short run, but high in the long term. They'll be there to help fund the whole thing when that day comes. To maximize your return on invested money, it's best to short sell stocks or invest in the highest quality bonds. That means the stock is probably overvalued at the moment, and it could easily drop down to $3 or $4.
