More specifically, this invention relates to supported phosphoric acid catalysts and their use in the liquid phase hydrocarbon conversion of organic compounds containing aromatic nuclei. It is well known that hydrocarbon conversion reactions are often more effectively carried out under conversion conditions using solid catalyst compositions than under liquid slurry conditions using liquid hydrocarbon conversion catalyst compositions. In the case of hydrocarbon conversion processes such as, for example, fluid hydrocarbon conversion processes employing solid catalyst compositions, it is particularly advantageous to employ a catalyst composition which has been stabilized in that the catalyst composition has been subjected to a structural-modifying operation. This will enhance the activity of the catalyst, improve the selectivity to product, reduce the formation of by-products and reduce the tendency of the catalyst composition to deactivate under hydrocarbon conversion conditions. Examples of such structural-modifying operations include, but are not limited to, the conversion of a portion of the metal oxide composition of the catalyst to a modifier-forming oxide species, such as silicon oxide, by one or more methods known to the art, such as, for example, by contact of the catalyst composition with a silicon-containing reactive material such as a silicon-containing organosilane in a hydrocarbon conversion zone.
